You are deploying a Microsoft SQL Server architecture to support a new mission-critical application. The application includes a dedicated reporting component that performs read-only operations against the application's databases.
You need to implement a solution that meets the following requirements:
Provide maximum uptime for the databases.

Include automatic failover in the event of a hardware problem on the primary server.

Separate the reporting workload from the read/write transactional processing workload and contain real-time data.

Modifications to the application to support the new architecture are not permitted.
What should you implement?
A. a file share witness
B. a Microsoft Azure Stretch Database
C. a Windows Cluster with a shared-nothing architecture
D. an Always On Availability group with secondary replicas in asynchronous-commit mode
E. a SQL Server failover cluster instance (FCI)
F. log shipping
G. an Always On Availability Group with all replicas in synchronous-commit mode
Answer: G
Explanation:
Explanation/Reference:
Explanation:
Synchronous-commit mode emphasizes high availability over performance, at the cost of increased transaction latency.
