Explanation: A passive asset allocation strategy that involves establishing specific target percentages for the various asset classes and rebalancing only as necessary to maintain those percentages as long as the investor's investment objectives remain unchanged is called strategic asset allocation. Tactical asset allocation is an active strategy that involves trying to time the market to some extent. Dynamic asset allocation is also an active strategy in which the portfolio mix is adjusted as markets rise and fall, such that the weighting is heaviest in those asset classes that can be expected to perform well under the current economy. Interactive asset allocation is a fictitious strategy.
