The Cisco Unified Border Element is a session border controller designed to provide easy, secure, and cost-effective connectivity between independent unified communications networks or network domains for different enterprises. It provides interconnection between incompatible applications within the enterprise network, between different enterprises for business-to-business applications, and between enterprise networks and service provider Session Initiation Protocol (SIP) trunks.

The Cisco Unified Border Element provides key session management capabilities, H.323 and SIP interworking functions, and network-to-network interface security and demarcation capabilities. It performs most of the same functions of a public switched telephone network (PSTN)-to-IP gateway but joins two VoIP call legs. Media packets can either flow through (thus hiding the networks from each other) or around the Cisco Unified Border Element platform.
