Which of the following is an indicator of interpersonal skills that are necessary for members of a team?

I. Routinely keeps superiors, team members, and other appropriate parties informed of significant developments.

II. Spends sufficient time cultivating contacts with peers to obtain timely information or resolve issues outside formal channels.

III.

Routinely assumes an appropriate amount of work or responsibility for group projects.

A. I, II, and III.

B. I only.

C. I and II only.

D. II and III only.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Building trust is central to team effectiveness. Individuals build trust through use of interpersonal skills that include interaction, cooperation, and ability to deal with other people. Thus, trust is built through timely and accurate communication; supportive behavior; showing respect, e.g., by delegation and effective listening; fairness of evaluations; predictability of behavior and promise-keeping; and competence exemplified by sound judgment and technical proficiency. Thus, a trusted team member routinely keeps superiors, team members, and other appropriate parties informed of significant developments. She also spends sufficient time cultivating contacts with peers to obtain timely information or resolve issues outside formal channels. However, routinely assuming an appropriate amount of work or responsibility for group projects is indicative of team participation, not of the interpersonal skills required of team members.
