C. Tex must pay taxes on $14,600, which will be taxed at a preferential long-term capital gain rate under current tax law.

D. Tex must pay taxes on $14,600, which will be taxed as ordinary income at Tex's marginal tax rate.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation: If Tex purchased 1,000 shares of Stocks4U at its offer price of $32 on February 26th, and sold his shares the following year on March 15th for $45 a share, he must pay taxes on $13,000, which will be taxed at a preferential long-term capital gain rate under current tax law.

Tex's gain is calculated based on the price he paid for the shares, which included the front-end load, or $32. Since he sold the shares for $45, his gain was $13 a share, or $13,000 for his 1,000 shares. His holding period began the day after his purchase, or February 27th, and ended on the day he sold his shares on March 15th. Since this is longer than twelve months, his gain will be taxed at a preferential long-term capital gain rate under current tax law.
